SEEKING JUSTICE: THE LEO FRANK CASE REVISITED

JANUARY 19 – AUGUST 14, 2011

Using photos, court records, film, family letters and artifacts, this comprehensive exhibit recounts the tragic 1913 murder of Mary Phagan, a 13-year old white Christian girl and the controversial arrest, trial, conviction, and commuting of the death sentence and then lynching of Leo Frank, the Jewish superintendent of the National Pencil Factory in Atlanta. This highly studied case sparked a surge of overt antisemitism that galvanized the Anti-Defamation League, reenergized the Ku Klux Klan, and led to Supreme Court rulings and decades of debate over Frank's innocence.

ISAAC BASHEVIS SINGER & HIS ARTISTS

MAY 3 – AUGUST 28, 2011

Singer, who lived on Miami Beach, won the 1978 Nobel Prize in literature. He spun tales that unleashed a rich storehouse of Jewish popular imagination, interweaving everyday life with wonders emerging from dreams and nightmares. 25 of his books were illustrated by 17 artists, some from Florida. Exhibition created by Hebrew Union College–Jewish Institute of Religion Museum.

Clouds Across the Sun: Book Review: Ellen Brazer

Before the end of WWII, Hitler charged a group of his most trusted and brilliant comrades with a mission—educate your progeny and then elevate them to positions of power throughout the world. Steeped in fact and impeccably researched, Clouds Across the Sun is the story of just one of these children. From Naples, Florida to New York City, and Washington D.C., to Israel and then the killing grounds of Vilnius, Poland (Lithuania), this story is one of great romance, discovery, redemption, and enlightenment as Jotto Wells unravels the intrigue that surrounds a plan to take over the government of the United States.
